

James Andison has been sculpting in wood for over ten years and uses his artistic talents to create vertical art from one of nature's greatest gifts. His large, towering pieces adorn award-winning homes in the Canadian Rockies, adding unique ambience to dwellings built by discerning clientele looking for awe inspiring artwork to compliment their décor. Some would call his pieces totem poles, but James prefers vertical art, as he does not confine his creativity to traditional native design, but embraces all cultures, religions and the individual preferences of his clients.
